14. General Objectives

The general objectives of the Family Law curricular unit are the in-depth study of legal relations and the respective regulation. For this purpose, the matter is divided into several chapters: family law as a complex normative system: internal and international sources (International Conventions and Regulations of the European Union), sources of family relations, matrimonial law (personal and patrimonial effects of marriage), filiation, adoption, civil sponsorship and maintenance.

15. Specific Objectives

Study of family and para-family legal relationships and their internal and multi-localized framework and the problem raised by the relevance of canonical matrimonial law in our legal system.

16. Skills to be acquired

With the study of family law, the aim is to provide students with a thorough preparation for the appreciation and resolution of all the issues that family relationships raise in the context of modern social life, taking into account their legal and practical importance and also the sociological projection.

17. Teaching Methodology

Conceptual analysis of the different types of family and para-family relationships, as well as the practical illustration of family phenomena in the various aspects of their genesis, development, extension or modification.

18. Course Unit Program

General Part: General notions essentially related to the notion of family law and family and family relationships. Sources of Family Law: of national origin and provisions of international origin (International Conventions and European Union Law - Regulations).
Special Part: particular attention is paid to the legally established discipline for regulating family relationships, considering kinship, affinity, marriage and adoption as such, marriage deserving a development adjusted to its complexity and structure. The special part also covers the study of human artificial procreation, filiation (including the exercise of parental responsibilities), whether it originates from the act of natural birth (natural filiation) or results from the constitution of the adoption relationship. Civil sponsorship is also analyzed from the perspective of relevant legal effects for children.

19. Assessment Methods

- Continuous assessment (periodic tests, practical classes and written assignments).
- Final evaluation (frequency exams and final evaluation).

20. Didactic Resources

- Applicable legislation
